Joseph Introduction: Fade text in “Common Interview Q’s with Answers.” Fade text out Image: Link	have 3 sec of room noise because of the audio loops. Hello, I am Joseph Flores, with me is Reese Shackelford, and Sean Smith. These are a few questions you might encounter when applying for a Web Development Job. We will give you our best advice on how to answer these questions professionally.
Reese What do you like to do outside of work? image	Don’t try to claim you enjoy hobbies you don’t. Instead, focus on activities that show personal growth and skills.
Sean What kind of work environment do you like best? Big Brain Image: link	This question should be answered based on what you want to do if you want to work alone make sure to tell them so they know. This ensures that they don’t put you in a spot you don’t want to be in and if they don’t have the type of work environment you want then you would know not to work there.
Joseph Discuss your educational background. link	When answering questions about your education: Connect your education to the job; Consider extracurricular activities; Consider soft skills skills, this includes but is not limited to handshakes, presentations, greetings, and farewells.; Go beyond the resume, give details about things that are uncommon or memorable from your education. These might be things that are frivolous on a resume but fine to be spoken.
Reese Describe your dream job. image	Answer by discussing your strengths and skills and how they relate to the job. Don’t be afraid to say you might move on to a different job. Most interviewers realize that most employees don’t plan to stay for the rest of their lives.
Sean Why do you want this job?	This question should be answered by talking about what you like in the company and how it would be great to work for. An example is that you like the products and projects that the

Joseph Are you a leader or a follower? Image: link	Sometimes sticking with one of these as an answer can negatively affect you. Saying you are a leader and only a leader can make you seem bull-headed and unable to take orders. While sticking with being a follower can make you seem unmotivated and lack initiative. Try to be both and show examples of when you have been both a leader and a follower. If you only have examples of being one, you can say you are more so a over b .
Reese What is your greatest accomplishment? image	Don't get stuck on trying to think of your most impressive achievement. Instead, mention a few achievements that show your work ethic and values. And if possible, choose examples that tie back to the job.
Sean Tell me how you think other people would describe you. Big Brain Image: link	This question should be answered by putting yourself in someone that enjoys your company's shoes to see what you're like from their point of view and make sure to stay truthful about how you think that they view you.
Joseph What questions do you have for me? Image: link	It is important to ask something here because the interviewer most likely does not get asked anything and this can help you stand out. Questions like "I was wondering what projects you have lined up in the future for the [insert position or department]?" and "What direction do you think the [blank] department of this company will lead in the future?"
Reese Tell me about the toughest decision you had to make in the last six months. image	Make your answer one that shows that you can make a difficult analytical or reasoning-based decision. You can also show that you can make decisions based on data that includes interpersonal considerations.
Conclusion	Good luck, with any future interviews and remember to use these tips
